November 2014

Dear reader,

emerging industries require innovation at the interface of industries, technologies and services including the cross-sector implementation of Key Enabling Technologies (KET). The strategic project CluStrat aimed at the development of new cluster concepts fostering such cross-fertilization in order to better seize the related opportunities and advance the emerging industries in the European regions.

Since October 2011, the transnational consortium of 18 central European partners has worked together developing a joint strategy on new cluster concepts for central Europe. New approaches on how to activate the potentials of clusters were designed by cluster policy makers and practitioners and tested in eight pilot actions.

While the joint strategy has been published already, we invite you to have a look at the following papers which have been finalized over the past weeks:

- # Policy recommendations
- # Proposals for actions
- # Comprehensive brochure delivering CluStrat's final results
- # National reports showcasing the major results for each project country

We hope you enjoy the read!
